Thomas Kessler

About Lena Richter:

Thomas Kessler funded Elena's investigation into offshore accounts, but Lena Richter was the one who leaked the document - suggesting Thomas may have orchestrated the leak to cover up his own motives, since the killer used the dessert course as a distraction, implying a premeditated act.

Lena Richter

About Sophie Meier:

Lena Richter confirmed the leak to the group, but Sophie Meier, as the coastal shipping subsidies official, had no motive to hide the truth - yet the killer exploited the dessert course, suggesting Sophie's role in the scheme was unknown to the group, making her a suspect.

Julian Schmid

About Anna Schneider:

Julian Schmid exchanged notes on offshore accounts during the appetizer course, but Anna Schneider, the one serving dessert, left no trace - the killer's identity was hidden by the distraction of the dessert course, which Julian might have noticed was a setup.

Sophie Meier

About Markus Vogel:

Sophie Meier was responsible for the subsidies, yet Markus Vogel knew the truth - the killer used the dessert course as a distraction, suggesting Markus might have been complicit, since only one person knew the truth and the killer exploited the timing to conceal the act.

Markus Vogel

About Anna Schneider:

Markus Vogel was the only one who knew the truth - the killer used the dessert course as a distraction - yet Anna Schneider, the one serving dessert, left no trace, only a dropped spoon and half-eaten matjessalat, suggesting she was the one who executed the murder.

Anna Schneider

About Lukas Winkler:

Anna Schneider served the dessert course, and Lukas Winkler, Elena's former colleague, was present during the main course - yet no one noticed the knife in her throat until dessert was cleared, implying Lukas may have known the timing was a setup, but chose not to act.

Lukas Winkler

About Julian Schmid:

Lukas Winkler, as a former colleague of Julian Schmid, was present during the appetizer course - yet Julian exchanged notes on offshore accounts, suggesting Lukas may have known the truth, but Julian did not act, making Lukas a potential suspect.
